Exceptional Family Member Program screening matches needs with services

Soldiers with exceptional family members can help ensure their next assignment in Europe or elsewhere has the services they need through the Exceptional Family Member Program.

A critical part of the Soldier's assignment process is for the family to go through EFMP screening. Assignment managers consider the special education and medical needs of family members in the assignment of Soldiers.

"The Army family with special needs should actively seek out the EFMP manager in their community before their next move to ensure they are provided information as part of the assignments process," said William A. Cannon, Installation Management Agency-Europe coordinator. "The Soldier or spouse can play a critical role in making sure their family's requirements are considered in advance, so that their next duty location will have the types of services available they need."

The EFMP is designed to provide a comprehensive, multi-agency approach that brings together the breadth of community support in terms of housing, medical care and schooling to provide a coordinated approach to meet the special needs of a family.

The EFMP manager coordinates all components of the program. The EFMP manager is there for assistance from arrival until time for a move. The EFMP manager is a vital link to assist the family in linking up with the required services upon arrival, and when leaving to assist in ensuring the departing family has secured all needed documents for their next duty assignment, including connecting them with the EFMP manager at the new post.

All community services must be accessible to those with disabilities. If EFMP managers are made aware of an accessibility issue, they can work to ensure exceptional family members are accommodated.

EFMP managers are located in Army Community Service centers in each community. Information about the EFMP can also be obtained online at www.efmconnections.org. (IMA-E Release)
